Key Takeaways

Cable trays for computer rooms range from around $15 for small under-desk trays to over $300 for professional overhead or ladder-style systems.

Consumer-Grade Under-Desk Cable Trays

For typical office or home computer setups, under-desk cable trays are widely available:

- Amazon and Walmart offer trays priced between $15 and $80, depending on size, material, and mounting type (clamp, screw, or adhesive) .
- Kits like the Link2Home 18-piece cable management kit cost around $24 and include a powder-coated steel tray with accessories for organizing multiple cables .
- Individual under-desk trays, such as the VIVO 17-inch clamp-on tray, are priced around $30-$50 .
- Modular sets from Mockett allow linking multiple trays for longer runs, with prices starting at $37-$42 per set .

These trays are suitable for light to moderate cable loads, typically holding up to 11 lbs and designed for desks, small server racks, or home offices .

Professional or Heavy-Duty Cable Tray Systems

For larger computer rooms, server rooms, or data centers, industrial cable trays are recommended:

- McMaster-Carr and CableOrganizer offer a wide range of basket, ladder, solid, and snake trays, with prices starting as low as $1.50 for small accessories and $50-$150 for standard-length trays .
- High-capacity or specialized trays, such as Snake Tray 201 Series or Middle Atlantic Cable Ladders, can cost $80-$320 depending on material, size, and load capacity .
- These systems are designed for overhead or under-floor installations, supporting large bundles of power and data cables, and are often modular for custom layouts.

Factors Affecting Price

- Material: Steel or aluminum trays are more expensive than plastic or mesh trays.
- Size and load capacity: Longer trays or those supporting heavier cables cost more.
- Mounting type: Screw-mounted or modular systems are pricier than adhesive or clamp-on trays.
- Accessories: Kits with brackets, zip ties, or cable sleeves increase the total cost.

In summary, small under-desk trays suitable for a few computers cost $15-$80, while professional cable tray systems for full computer rooms or data centers range from $50 to over $300, depending on size, material, and configuration .
