- Argos stocks optical cables alongside HDMI, USB, and other computer cables, with prices generally ranging from £6 to £50, depending on length and connector type .
- John Lewis & Partners provides premium optical cables, often priced between £15 and £60, with free delivery on orders over £50, making it a convenient option for home audio setups .

- eBay UK features a wide range of fibre optic cable products, often at discounted prices, with some items available for under £10, while professional-grade cables can reach £100 or more .

Factors Affecting Price

- Cable Type: Toslink cables are generally cheaper than multimode or single-mode fibre optic cables.
- Length: Longer cables increase in price; for example, a 1–2 meter Toslink cable may cost £5–£10, while a 50–150 meter fibre optic cable can exceed £100 .

- Build Quality: Reinforced or outdoor-rated cables are more expensive due to durability and shielding.
- Brand and Retailer: Premium brands and established retailers like John Lewis often charge more but provide warranties and reliable delivery .

Recommendations

- For home audio setups, short Toslink cables from Amazon or Argos are cost-effective.
- For professional or outdoor installations, consider reinforced fibre optic cables from Amazon or eBay, keeping in mind the higher price for longer lengths.
- Always check delivery options and return policies, especially for higher-priced cables, to ensure value and reliability. By comparing these retailers, you can find optical cable fittings in the UK that suit both your budget and technical requirements.
